The Kozloff Presidency

Story by Tracey M. Dooms

How does BU President Jessica Kozloff want to be remembered? I hope that people say, she left this institution stronger than she found it, Kozloff says. I think that's what every president wants to leave behind.

In her 13 years as president of Bloomsburg University, Jessica Sledge Kozloff has forged a decisive path that has led to rising enrollment, an improved physical campus and a growing academic reputation. The road that led her here, though, was anything but direct, as she detored from her original destination of high school teacher.
I took that first administrative position because I was trying to patch my career around my husbands, she says. In my mind, being in the classroom was the ultimate aspiration. In fact, I felt sorry for administrators.
Soon, however, Kozloff gained a different perspective. She not only found that being an administrator was satisfying, she discovered that she liked being able to influence decisions that could impact a broader group of students.
Today, Kozloffs decisions directly impact more than 8,700 students annuallyplus thousands more who will benefit from her legacy in the years following her retirement at the end of 2007.

The path to the presidency

Growing up, Kozloff knew she wanted to work in education. She frequently tagged along with her father, who was superintendent of a small rural school district in Texas. I always saw myself as a teacher, she recalls.
Two powerful mentors reinforced her dream: Kozloff's high school drama teacher, who inspired her love of theater and made her realize how much a strong faculty-student relationship could mean, and a college political science faculty member, who encouraged her to think about teaching at the postsecondary level.
With a bachelors degree in education and masters in political science from the University of Nevada-Reno (and later a doctorate in political science from Colorado State University), Kozloff moved to Colorado where husband Steve established his career. She taught political science courses at the University of Northern Colorado until her part-time position was eliminated. I loved teaching and was absolutely devastated when that door was shut, she says.
I tell students that sometimes a very big disappointment can turn out to be a very positive influence in life, says Kozloff. She was asked to apply for a position as an assistant dean of students at UNC, where she had just lost her teaching job. I really missed teaching, but soon learned that I enjoyed having an impact on students in a different environment.
Even today, her philosophy is a modification of the old saying that success comes from doing what you love.
Instead, Kozloff says, Success comes from always finding something to love in what you do. Follow your heart and do what you love, of course, but sometimes to get to do what you love, you've got to learn to love what you're doing.
The watershed moment in Kozloffs career came in 1985-86 when she served as an American Council on Education fellow, working with both the National Governors Association and the Education Commission of the States on improving undergraduate education. That experience really opened my mind to the possibility that I could go much further in my administrative career than I had anticipated, she says.
While serving as vice president for academic and student affairs for the State Colleges of Colorado, Kozloff received a call from an executive search firm that wanted to present her as a candidate for university presidencies.
I have an incredibly supportive husband who said, Let's try it, she says. Because Steves family is from Pennsylvania, the chief job at Bloomsburg was appealing and, on July 1, 1994, she became the 17th president of Bloomsburg University.
Students will frequently ask me, how does one become a president? Kozloff says. Most presidents that I know didn't set out to become a president. I tell students, prepare as best you can in whatever job you do. Be the best you can, and be open to new possibilities.

Accessible but decisive

Not only was Kozloff's path to the presidency influenced by her early moves to support her husbands career, but her presidential style is affected by her gender, she says.
I can't speak for all female presidents, but I think I am probably seen as more accessible than the traditional image of a president, she says. That may be because I came from the West, where the style and culture are more open and informal. But a lot of what I bring to the position is grounded in my life as a mother and my experiences as a marriage partner.
While Steve was so busy establishing his practice, I made the decision to put my career on hold until the children were ready for school, she says. I'm so proud of them and have never regretted making that decision. Besides, I learned a lot about patience and decision making from those full-time parenting days.
Kozloff views her accessible image as a double-edged sword. There are times when I have to make an unpopular decision and the reaction is stunned surprise, she says. Sometimes I think people are a little taken off guard when the tough side comes out.
I have tried to model myself after leaders who listen and welcome differing viewpoints before they make a decision but who understand that ultimately a decision has to be made.

One of Kozloff's most difficult decisions involved the policy to arm university police. Her decision to recommend doing so came in the wake of the 1999 Columbine High School tragedy and, in 2001, the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and a major bomb scare on the Bloomsburg campus. When she brought the issue to BUs Council of Trustees for approval, police officers were armed at many of the 14 institutions in the Pennsylvania State System of Higher Education. The decision was not popular with a very vocal part of the community, she recalls, but you just have to go ahead and make that decision.
Although making unpopular decisions comes with the territory, she says she tries to get consensus on as many issues as she can, a tie-in with the political science theory she learned in college. That theory differentiates between primary and secondary interests. A primary interest is one that is absolutely vital for the well-being of an organization; arming the police was one such issue for her.
A secondary interest is an objective a person would like to accomplish, but isn't absolutely essential. She remembers several years ago when she suggested moving the husky statue from a spot where it is less visible to a prominent location near a new brick walkway through the heart of the campus. Some folks started a drive to Save the Husky, she recalls. I just said, Hey, forget it; the husky stays where it is.

Lasting legacy

Over the past 13 years, Kozloff has been tempted with offers of other higher education positions, but never followed through. When Steve and I made the decision to come here, it was with the understanding that, if it worked out, we would stay here, she says. I hoped that I would be able to stay at least 10 years. Plus, I had fallen in love with the place.
When she retires on Dec. 31, 2007, Kozloff will have the longest tenure of any Bloomsburg University president since Harvey A. Andruss (1939-1969). Already, a few candidates for the position she is vacating have called her for information about Bloomsburg. I tell them that they would be incredibly lucky to get this job, she says. This is a jewel.
The retiring president is proud to note that all three former Bloomsburg provosts whom she has worked with have gone on to become presidents themselves. Just as mentors helped further her career, she focuses on mentoring others. What I try to do with all the people who work for me is encourage them to be innovative, to be self-starters, she says. I try not to micromanage.
Kozloff is exploring her options for retirement, ranging from consulting to teaching at the doctoral level. I'm not ready to completely give up being involved with higher education, she says. I think I still have something to give.
Regardless of what she chooses, the focus of her life will be different. Both Steve and I have been involved in professions where we have had to put our personal lives second, she says. It's time to put our marriage and family on the front burner.
Still, the Kozloff's won't be leaving Bloomsburg University entirely behind. Already they have donated $50,000 to help fund an endowment for the Kozloff Undergraduate Research Awards. The Alumni Association is matching any additional contributions to the endowment, up to $25,000. Each award will provide a stipend for a student to work with a particular faculty member on a joint creative or scholarly project.
When I try to describe the essence of Bloomsburg University, that close faculty-student relationship comes to mind, Jessica Kozloff says. I have been so fortunate during my career to have people mentor me and to help me see greater possibilities for myself. Steve and I would like to be remembered here as helping that to happen.
I think thats an obligation that all of us have, to pass on to the next generation.

Jessica Sledge Kozloff

Jessica Sledge Kozloff became president of Bloomsburg University on July 1, 1994. Before that, she was vice president for academic and student affairs for the State Colleges of Colorado, a system of four regional campuses serving 26,000 students. Previously, she held several administrative positions at the University of Northern Colorado in Greeley.
Kozloff, 66, has taught undergraduate courses in political science at the University of Nevada-Reno, Colorado State University in Fort Collins, the University of Northern Colorado and Metropolitan State College of Denver, and was a member of the graduate faculty at the University of Northern Colorado.
An author, lecturer and consultant, she earned a doctorate in political science from Colorado State University. She completed masters work in political science at the University of Nevada-Reno, where she also earned a bachelor's degree in education.
Active in organizations on the local, national and international levels, Kozloff is chair of the Middle States Commission on Higher Education and just completed a term on the board of directors of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities. She serves on the Presidents Leadership Group of the Higher Education Center for Alcohol and Other Drug Prevention and, locally, on the Geisinger Health Plan and the Geisinger Indemnity Insurance Co. board of directors and the Geisinger Health System Community Advisory Council. She served on the National Collegiate Athletic Association Presidents Commission and continues to serve on task forces for the commission.
She and her husband, Dr. Stephen Kozloff, are the parents of two married children and have four grandchildren. Both Kozloff's enjoy music and theater, as well as biking, hiking and golfing.

It seems like only yesterday you said, "I do not know if college is for me." Now look, in only 4 years you have achieved a dual major in Education. You have shown such strong perseverance and maturity throughout your years at Bloom, and it is no wonder you have blossomed into a beautiful young woman. We are very proud of you and your accomplishments, such as making the Dean's List. You will go far in life as you have that special spunk. May all of your dreams come true, as you deserve nothing but the best. Never stop reaching for the stars, as nothing is out of reach.
We will love you always,
Mom, Dad, Jennifer and Rosalina

Gabrielle F. Miskinis

Congratulations Gabrielle on your special day. You have always inspired the people around you and encouraged the others to do the right thing with your strong beliefs. You have so much talent and so many gifts and have always given of yourself. We wish you every opportunity awaiting you in the future and an extra chance of reaching beyond yourself and let your heart carry your destiny. You accomplished your dreams with great success and have achieved the extraordinary. Believe in tomorrow but don't forget the past. We are very proud of you Gabrielle and love you very much.

Love always,
Mom, Dad and Greg

William Thomas Frank

Graduation is a

Passage

To a future filled with

Promise

And unlimited

Potential.

Fun-loving,

Fearless,

Feet first,

That's the kind of boy you were…

You've grown up now, but you still embrace every day

With the same passion

And sense of adventure…

You're an inspiration, and you make it so easy to be proud…

May your mind be enlightened by

God's Wisdom,

Your soul be enriched by

His Goodness,

Your life be touched by

His Kindness,

And your heart be blessed with

His Love.

We love you Vincent!

How proud we were when you took your first few baby steps and NOW here you go taking your first steps into your new life. Where did the years go.....I still remember each day. It is with tremendous pride and much Love that we watched our baby girl grow to such a beautiful and intelligent young woman.

Congratulations and God Bless you

Love,
Mom, Dad and Dean

Rachel Leigh Brous

We moved you into Columbia Hall on the morning of your 18th birthday, when you were still a child. Do you remember what we asked you just before we drove away? With a touch of fear in your voice we heard these words escape from your mouth, "What do I do know?" Our choral response surprised you, "Anything you want to do."

Fortunately, what you wanted was to find success. Reflecting upon these last four years, watching you embrace your personal and academic accomplishments, we can only smile with pride while our hearts dance with joy.

As you get ready to begin a new chapter in your life, we hear you whisper the same question: "What do I do now?" And with enthusiastic confidence, we repeat our initial response, "Anything you want to do." The difference is that this time YOU know you can do anything you want because you believe in yourself.

The future is knocking at your door, inviting you out to play.
Welcome the vast possibilities that exist. LIVE! LOVE! LAUGH! LEARN!
